STRIPLING

By Frederick B Watt

The heat of childhood, close behind,
Still mists the mirror of our mind
And toys with we, careless, play,
Are things men died for yesterday.

Oh Canada, so richly blessed
By God and time so unoppressed,
An unkmpt Freedom waits unsun -
And cries for guidance - bold, mature.

It matters nothing that we ask
To do some adolescent task;
The anti-Christ, destruction bent,
Is starkly free of sentiment.

Youth is a brushed-aside excuse
When Hate's stampeding hosts tear loose.
Lust spares no favorites, Old or young
Can trust but roots from which they've sprung.

Our sires who lived to spurn the yoke
Were strangely honest, simply folk;
Their strength drawn daily from the sod
And anchored in the living God.

The rugged certainty they bred
Was not a strain inherited.
Each generation paid its price -
Or judged it pointless sacrifice.
We judge in turn - because we must,
Democracy is ours in trust -

Loose-limbed, good-natured, with a thirst,
For all we offer - best or worst.

The selfishness of all mankind
Mounts as a whirlwind, mad and blind,
But brave, clean hearts, still ours to give,
Can rear a nation fit to live.

Oh Canada, may we enthroned
A wisdom greater than our own
Should faith, hard driven, make her stand
Within the Ramparts of this land.

CHAPTER III.—Continued

"Mine is rather a delicate errand, but it struck me—I have found myself thinking about you many times since we met—that possibly . . . I might be able to find a good post for you. Your situation, if you will forgive my saying as much, is a little tragic. Association with—criminals or people with criminal records has a drug effect even upon the finest nature."

She smiled.

"In other words, Mr. Harlow," she said quietly, "you're under the impression I'm rather badly off, and that you would like to make life easier for me?"

He beamed at this.

"Exactly," he said.

"It is very kind of you—most kind," she said, and meant it. "But I have a very good post in a lawyer's office."

He inclined his head graciously.

"Good People

"Mr. Stebbings has been very good to me."

"One . . .?" His head jerked on one side. "Stebbins of Stebbings, Field & Marrow—surely not! They were my lawyers until a few years ago."

She knew this also.

"Quite good people, though a little old-fashioned," he said. "Then of course you have heard Mr. Stebbings speak of me?"

"Only once," she confessed. "He is a very reticent man and never talks about his clients."

Harlow bit his lip in thought.

"An excellent fellow! I have often wondered whether I was wrong in taking my affairs from him. I wish you would mention that to him when you see him. I understood you were working in the office of the New Library Syndicate?"

She smiled at this.

"It's curious you should say that; their offices are in Lincoln's Inn Fields, but next door."

"Ah!" he said. "I see how the mistake arose," and added quickly: "A friend of mine who knows you saw you going into—an office, and obviously made a mistake."

He did not tell her who was their mutual friend, and she was not sufficiently interested to inquire.

"Will you excuse me?" she said.

This time the knock at the door was more pronounced.

"Those are my cleaners, and one of them is rather inclined to tell me her troubles. I may keep you waiting a little while."

She hurried out of the room, and he heard the sound of a door opening, as Jim Carlton and Elk came back into the dining room.

"A very charming young lady that," said Mr. Harlow.

"Very," said Jim shortly.

"Women do not interest me greatly"—the Splendid Harlow picked a tiny thread of cotton from his immaculate cape and dropped it on the floor. "They think along lines which I find it difficult to follow. They are emotional, too—swayed by momentary fears and scruples. . . ."

The sound of voices in the passage, one high-pitched and complaining;

. . . what with the fog and everything; miss, it's lucky we're here at all. . . ."

Two shabby figures passed the open door, followed by Allen.

"I suppose you don't know Ingle, Mr. Harlow?" Jim was examining the photograph on the mantelpiece.

"A long-firm swindler; clever, but with a kink even in his kindness. Believes in revolution and all that sort of thing. . . . blood and guillotines and tumbrils; the whole box of tricks."

Something made him look round.

Mr. Stratford Harlow was standing in the centre of the room, gripping the edge of a small table to keep him upright. His face was white and haggard and drawn, and in his pale eyes was a look of horror such as Jim Carlton had never seen in the face of a man. Elk sprang forward and caught him as he swayed, and led him to a big settee.

Into this Stratford Harlow sank and, leaning forward, covered his face with his hands.

"Oh, my God!" he said, rocked slowly from side to side, and fell in a heap on the floor.

The colossus had fainted.

CHAPTER IV.

"A little heart trouble," said Mr. Harlow, smiling as he set down the glass of water. "I'm terribly sorry to have given you so much trouble, Miss Elvers. I haven't had an attack in years."

He was still pale, but such was his extraordinary self-control that the hand that put down the glass was without a tremor.

"Fie!" he dabbed his forehead daintily with a silken handkerchief and rose steadily to his feet.

Elk was engaged in the prosaic task of brushing the dust stains from his knees, and looking up.

"You'd better let me take you home, Mr. Harlow," he said.

Stratford Harlow shook his head.

"That is quite unnecessary," quite," he said. "I have my car at the door, and a remedy for all such mental disturbances as these! And it is not a drug," he smiled.

Nevertheless, Elk went down with him to the car.

"Will you tell my chauffeur to drive to the Charing Cross power station?" was the surprising request, and long after the car had moved off in the fog Elk stood on the side walk, wondering what business took this multimillionaire to such a venue.

They evidently knew Mr. Harlow at the power station, and they at any rate saw nothing remarkable in his visit. The engineer, who was smoking at the door, stood back to let him walk into the great machinery hall, and placed a stool for him. And there, for half an hour, he sat, and the droning of the dynamos and the whirr and thud of the great engines were sedatives and anodynes to his troubled mind.

Here he had come before to think out great schemes, which developed best in this atmosphere. The power and majesty of big wheels, the rhythm of the driving belts as they sagged and rose, the shaded lights above the machine switchboards, the noisy quiet of it all stimulated him as nothing else could. Here he found the illusion of irresistibility that attended so perfectly to his own mood; the inevitable effects of the inevitable causes. The bearded tutor had left (Mrs. Edwin, the maid, tearfully explained) a fortnight before the passing of Miss Mercy.

"And if he hadn't gone," said Miss Alice with tight lips, "I should have made short work of him! The boy has been suppressed; He hasn't a word to say for himself."

A counsel, including the family lawyer, who was making his first acquaintance with Stratford, was held.

It was agreed that The Boy should have a flat in Park lane and the companionship of an elder man who combined knowledge of the world with a leaning toward piety. Such was found in the Rev. John Barthurst, M.A., an ex-naval chaplain.

Mrs. Edwin was pensioned off, the beginning of Stratford's independent life being celebrated with a dinner and a visit to "Charley's Aunt," through which roaring farce he sat with a stony face.

Danes Are Broken-Hearted

Know Your Country Taken By Treachery Is Facing Ruin

The day before the Nazis invaded Denmark the Danish king was assured personally by Germany that Hitler had no intention of sending his forces into that country, Joseph C. Harsco, correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, cabled his paper from Berlin. Yet, while the king was being assured, there were four German coalships at anchor in Copenhagen harbor with soldiers under their hatches. They stayed there in the darkness all day that Monday and all that night. At 5 a.m. they came out to take the capital in the morning mist.

"Denmark is broken-hearted," Harsco writes. "I never dreamed I should ever see such unspoken heart-ache in a people."

"Physically they are, so far, not badly treated. The forces of occupation are trying to be inconspicuous. Outwardly, one sees only the sentries with fixed bayonets in front of the hotels taken for headquarters, the grim efficient columns of war which move through the streets, the few soldiers in their gaudy uniforms full of butter and chocolate and cheese."

"German authorities act through the Danish government. The Danish flag flies everywhere. Germans are trying to prove to the outside world that they will occupy a country gently. But these are not the things that count in the hearts of the people."

"German authorities talked cheerfully about new trade opportunities with Germany. A staff of trade negotiators is already at work on arrangements which will integrate Denmark in the German economy. Perhaps they have schemes which will keep Denmark busy. Germany can provide coal, but not the high quality used in most Danish factories. They will have to be re-equipped in many respects."

"Perhaps some German steel will be allotted to Denmark, but can Germany spare any even if it can continue to get Swedish ore via the Baltic?"

"And where will oil and gasoline come from? These are Denmark's major industrial imports."

"The Danes see only these questions and assume their industries soon will be silent. The Germans recognize the impossibility of supplying the fodder necessary to keep Danish dairy farms operating. They calmly assume that if dairying is reduced, a balance can be obtained which will keep butter, eggs, cheese and bacon flowing from the farms."

"But Danish livestock grazes in pastures less than four months of the year. The other eight months the cattle and pigs are fed with imports from the U.S. and Japan. Of the 5,000,000 cows, how many must be butchered that the others may live? How can the prize Danish stock be maintained?"

"I found people who were beginning to think that perhaps it might have been much worse to go down in fighting desolation than face a future in which their shipping industry, overseas markets and prize cattle all are gone."

"The atmosphere is more unhappy than in Prague. The Czechs have had generations' experience in living under another nation during which the technique of underground activity was bred into them. But the Danes have no such tradition."

'HOPPER CONTROL SUGGESTIONS

Proper spring cultivation in districts where grasshoppers may occur will do a great deal to control the outbreak.

All stubble land intended for fallow or cropping within the grasshopper territory should be lightly cultivated as early as possible to bring to the surface the grasshopper eggs pods where exposure to sun and wind will destroy many of them. Early shallow cultivation also hastens germination of weed seeds thus permitting the weeds to be killed later on.

Spring ploughing at least five inches deep and followed by a packer is beneficial in the control of grasshoppers, but it is not recommended as a special practice for grasshopper control. Late in the spring, if grasshoppers are present on land to be summer-fallowed, cultivation from the outside towards the centre will drive grasshoppers into a restricted area where poison bait may be easily scattered. Cultural practices for grasshopper control are set. Poison should be used only in emergencies.

Gopher Poisoning

The proper time to poison gophers is early in the spring before green algae appears. The following recipe will be found satisfactory: (1) Mix together 1 quart of vinegar and 1 quart of water. (2) Add to the first solution one ounce of strychnine. Stir and heat if necessary until the strychnine is dissolved. (3) Add one pound of sugar. (4) Pour the hot solution over one-half bushel of grain, wheat or oats. (5) Add sufficient hot water to just cover the grain and let the mixture stand 24 hours.

Place one tablespoonful of the moistened grain well into the entrance of each gopher hole. Never scatter the grain on the surface, as birds may be poisoned with it.

There are a number of commercial gopher poisons on the market which are quite satisfactory. These should be used according to directions on the package.

New Bulletin

"Potato Production in Alberta" is the title of a bulletin which will be available soon from the Department of Agriculture. A circular, "Hints to Beginners in Beekeeping" is also being printed. "Home Decoration" is a new bulletin of interest to the ladies and will be available shortly. These publications can be obtained free of charge by writing to the Agricultural Extension Service, Department of Agriculture, Edmonton.

RED CROSS SHIP MILLION PIECES

Almost a million pieces of hospital and surgical supplies and clothing have been shipped overseas by the Canadian Red Cross Society during the past 10 months for the men of the Canadian forces and for distribution to Red Cross Societies of war-torn areas of Europe. It will be reported Tuesday at the Annual Meeting of the Central Council of the Society. Delegates from all over Canada will be present.

From February 1st to March 31st cases were shipped to the Canadian Red Cross Society in London. They contained thousands of articles in the women of Canada—hospital supplies and knitted articles. Thirty cases of hospital supplies were shipped during the same period to the Canadian Red Cross Society; 243 containing clothing for refugee women; children, to the Finnish Red Cross; 34 cases for Polish refugees; large quantities of woolen articles; clothing so necessary in the British winter climate have been distributed to the Canadian men in the Altogether, the Society's Committee in London, and grateful appreciation of the comfort of handmade socks has been expressed many officers on behalf of their men.

Dr. Fred W. Routley, National Commissioner, yesterday received a report from the overseas Visiting Committee at volunteer visitors had been received and were now attached to any hospitals in England and Scotland. It is the duty of these women to look after Canadian men lying wounded in these hospitals and relay their needs to the London office, from which parcels are forwarded regularly. Whenever necessary, messages are sent to the hospital visitor to the patients' parents in Canada.

This service, which unfortunately has grown to large proportions as the war goes on, is one of the most important pieces of work done by the Canadian Red Cross Society. Dr. Routley stated.

When Mary, Queen of Scots, was imprisoned in Tutbury Castle, Walsingham, in 1570, she furnished proof that beer was more than the drink of the commoner. New Home for Banff School of Fine Arts

The Banff School of Fine Arts has a new home which is as modern as the splendid work done by the school. The new auditorium, which was officially opened in January in the presence of educational and other Alberta leaders, will be the scene of the eighth annual session of the school, from August 1st to 31st.

This $50,000 building is made of native Tumble stone and is of the chalet design which harmonizes so well with the surroundings. The theatre has a seating capacity of 700 and a modern stage fitted with the finest lighting equipment and there are dressing rooms, music room, work rooms and other meeting rooms for small groups.

The building is truly a co-operative effort. The Parks Department decided two lots worth $10,000 to the Banff School Board and supplied plans and specifications free of charge; the Sir Edward Beatty donation of $2,500 to the Department of Extension of the University of Alberta made possible the furnishings and equipment of the stage and theatre.
